By utilizing the power of social media and the Internet these youth have sought solutions to solving world problems.

The Millennials Networking Change is an inspiring feature length documentary highlighting a generation of youth rising to resist – a global coming together mobilized to change the world and save it. By utilizing the power of social media and the Internet these youth have sought solutions to solving world problems. Whether they post a homemade video to promote their local cause or micro organization, or they tweet about the fraudulent acts of global politics, or utilize Facebook applications to raise money for earthquake victims in Haiti, these youth are globally connected, and determined to make a difference. The Millennials are leading one of the biggest social movements in history and may not even know it, because this movement does not fit the standard model. Prior social movements had leaders and ideologies, people joined them against one specific cause or injustice, and formed organized groups with a common goal. This movement is dispersed, inchoate, virtual and fiercely independent. It is taking place all over the world. It is estimated that there may be hundreds of thousands of youth led organizations living online today working toward saving our world and making it a better place to live. These people are arising one by one and joining this movement with the hope to make a difference. This film will explore one central question: is it working? Are we really making change?
